Tribute from Janice and Jim Stow

Relation: Second cousin. Our grandparents were siblings.

Such a fine, fine man! I wish we had got to know him sooner. On our last visit, he kept saying "I've been so lucky!" Every time he made a career change he felt he was "so lucky". We think Osoyoos has been so lucky to have George in their community.

So sorry to hear of his passing. He was my math teacher in high school in the 1970s! He was a good teacher and I respected him! He was also our customer in our farm Eqpt business , so nice to see him after I finished school!

A man with a good soul, my condolences to the family

Tribute from Asia Van Spronsen

Mr. Fraser was a saint, with virtually endless patience. I had him for homeroom throughout high school. In addition, he was our math teacher and grade eight basketball coach. The only time I ever saw Mr. Fraser exasperated (and rightfully so) was when a few thirteen-year-old girls had a small water fight in the bathroom outside of his classroom, when we were purportedly (and inauthentically) dealing with female issues. The rest of the time, it was cool, calm and collected, complete with a warm smile and a mere shake of the head, when things were going awry: scoring on our own basketball net in Princeton; rushing through the classroom door, late; "not getting it" in Math and Calculus 12... With a hand to his head, it was always re-set with patience, patience, and more patience. Mr. Fraser was the kind of man you knew you could count on: quietly documenting the school's various happenings, photographically, for the yearbook; lending out lunch money time and time again (it seemed like he had an endless supply of loonies ready to be borrowed and paid back); and answering question after question - always willing to try another way to help a student find understanding. Mr. Fraser was old-school reliable - we had his home phone number to call, when we were stuck on a difficult calculus problem, and boy did we use it... Many an evening, Mrs. Fraser would be passing the receiver over to her other half, so he could talk us through a tough equation, in preparation for an exam. For years after graduation, I chatted with the Frasers, when I was home for the summer, working - they were always genuinely caring and lovely people. I hope, one day, my own children meet a teacher like Mr. Fraser, along their own paths. Thank you for being you, Sir: a real fine character you were. You made a difference in my life, and I appreciate it.

Jim, and I will miss our friend George. He enjoyed playing Mexican Train, and he taught me to play bridge. Thanks for your friendship.
